Do this book ~~have~~ been in the back of my mind for many years.

11/505

I can ~~see at least~~ imagine 2 groups of people who might be interested in this little book

1. students of gendo engaged in the EarthLing Project

EarthLing is a debugged subset of wild english designed for ~~clear~~ thinking + accurate communication

One major aspect of the project consists in defining the core vocabulary and rules for generating new vocab as the need arises this book is written in ~~Eng~~ E^n earthling (formal invented)

2. student of english as a second language.

one of the major tasks of learning a new language as an adult is learning an adequate vocabulary is very important

But which words do you learn first which are the most important words.

[redacted] vocabulary is an essential aspect of mastering english but although its not something I'm interested in teaching. I specialize in teaching speaking/hearing skills it seemed that a list of the most important words should be available to them. I started looking — to my surprise there were none to be had. So I decided I thought that is should be difficult to generate such a list.

Music System Systematics Notation

music is one of Bob's great inventions here in Earth

- music is closed to millions because of the unnecessarily complex notation system and the anti-ergonomic structure of the piano keyboard.
- i have redesigned both
- a form of tablature, greatly simplifies music notation, doing away with shapes + flats, etc.
- a newly structured keyboard reduced the neuro-muscular complexity of mastering fingering by a factor of 100... maybe maybe only 10 for more than 20 years I've been a student of the relationship between language and intelligence/problem-solving

- whenever I noticed a sentence, paragraph, etc, that struck me as particularly well-written, original, memorable or something, i added it to my growing collection of pithy utterances.
- now i can share them with you
- the utterances are arranged from short ones to increasingly large ones.

i've left the names of the authors out of this page because im more interested in the the concepts than in who said them.

.it's no oversight on my part that there are no blank lines between quotes

.if you must know who said something, click on the last word of the quote and you will be taken to the name of the author

. use yours back button to return to the this quotes page.

.you could save this page as text and read it off line at your leisure

gif of BS signature

.you can use this as a thought catalyst by dragging the handle down to a random point in the vertical scroll bar and reading whatever utterances is at the top of the window

I think it's pretty much hopeless for most adults.
we must concentrate our effort on raising a new generation

TGW is a list of the most frequently used words in English.

As I see it acquiring a sufficient stock of word is one of the 3 successful domains a student of ESL must master... the other 2 being grammar and speaking/hearing skills.

But how does a student know which words to learn acquire this vocab.

Until recently I have advised my student to read at least ½ hour every day with a dictionary and word journal at hand.

Read the newspaper + popular press or children's science books.

11,644

But my students wanted more I was asked if there was a list of the most ~~commonly~~ important

I looked and was unable to find one.

NOTE TO STUDENTS

Analogy to architecture

words = materials

grammar = laws of physics to know a word is to have it available to the mouth/hear

One way of thinking about learning a language is that the task involves mastering 3 domains:

1. vocabulary – students must have a stock of words
2. grammar – ways of combining the words into meaningful patterns
3. speaking + hearing skills.

11,671

there is a certain undeniable logic to this analysis an order this is not to say that one is more important than another to know a word is to have it available to the tongue.

in reality, the process is occurring simultaneously in all three domains.

* if you're really poor and are struggling to maintain your physical necessities.
- if sending $10 to me is really a hardship, then I want you to use the program to master english and don't it with my blessing.
- later, when you're rich, you can pay me whatever you think it's worth

- it took nearly a year of working in my "spare" time to do this work it's possible to think of mastering english as consisting of 3 main taks.

1. learning a sufficient number of words with which to ~~talk~~ communicate 2. learning the rules for combining the words so as to make meaningful sentence.
3. learning the necessary speaking/hearing skills to communicate easily.

~~This Sends t~~ of couse, all 3 processes occur simultaneously learning these words with the eye then is not enough.

you must learn with the ear and tongue

rthling test

3 paragraphs written as two

1. Problem
2. One solution
3. Another solution

---

* thinking is not THE source of suffering
* attachment to thinking is * recognize thought for what it is topic for NGs

the map ≠ the territory map ≠ territory liberation and/or enlightenment

? what are the types of utterances
? what intentions motivate us to speak.

in daily life we must distinguish between form + intention
"close the door"
"will you close the door" intention is same, but different form

rthling test

- recently, there has been a lot of talk about poor reading abilities among u.s. student population
- a record number of high-schoolers are unable to read at grade-level

- in order to fix the problem we must understand its cause
- the reason is because the alphbet is not a good system.

- the solution is to start using FONOGRAFIKS everyone agrees, its a dangerous serious situation

. this is an area of lang i haven't previously given much thought i've been more interested in relationships between language and thinking, problem-solving - -

. but ~~the origins of L. is~~ the question of the origin of language and writing are tantalizing

? who did the original writing an why who were they writing for
* aside from inventory business mgt.
• what was important was remembered before writing • stories were told/retold generation after generation
• a culture is its story • writing would be useful as an aid to memory
• some "individual" got it • "i can right all this stuff down and I'll always have it"

11,992

he could leave letters (vowels) out because it didn't need to be very good for the intended purpose

* he already knew the story
* it was written for himself
* it was generations before anyone realized that memorizing it was redundant then writing took on an evangelical spirit

* i can share my ideas with others

* the original impulse was tribal storytelling memorizing the tribal story

? totally unrelated

sci.lang

- i've read several times that the ancient hebrew ~~sc~~ script left out vowels
- this always seemed strange to me.
? why would they leave out info. that ~~*~~ could lead to confusion
- while reading this again in A.L. an idea occurred to me
- i'd like to share it and see
- i realize that this may be ~~*~~dd stuff to many of you, but it's new and exciting to me
- here it is
- first i asked myself, "why were they writing this stuff, anyway"
- my answer, — an aid to memory
- for generation the tribes story was an oral tradition passed from generation

11,994

sci.lang

↑ to generation

- they weren't writing for "others" to read
- they wrote as a memory aid
- they already knew the story word for word
- some the accuracy/completness of the script was of minor importance
- it served only to "spark" the memory of the "teller"

- I'm a little surprised by your use of the words "totally unrelated" in referring to origin of language/writing
- obviously writing will not emerge in a situation where language has not already appeared
- so writing is totally dependent upon the prior existence of lang. language
- that is hardly "unrelated"

- only later was writing used to communicate new information to other people
- at this point the accuracy/completeness of the script becomes more important

? is this something that is common knowledge among the scholars of this domain or is it complete refuted by some evidence ~~i've ignored~~ of which i'm ignorant

- i am careful in my wording
- i didn't mean to imply that they arose together... ob
- obviously writing won't/will not emerge in the absence of pre-existing language
- i was merely commenting on the fact that i find the origins of both of interest to me
- actually, it's not all that mysterious to me
- ~~for~~ from chimp communication to people isn't such a huge leap really
- however, in this case, a small change led to wildly out of proportion changes... the butterfly wing-effect perhaps
- writing, however, is what distinguishes ~~s~~apes from apes.
- the ability to store knowledge outside the body is what make our world possible today i hit upon an thorough metaphor that i believe makes my point as clearly as i am capable of making it

here it is it a bit tedious but it has the advantage of being thorough/precise

- unless you really don't care, it wouldn't be a good idea to give me $75,000 and a note saying, "buy me a vehicle."

  unless, of course, you actually don't know what you want and are rich enough for $75,000 surprizes

- you can see there is a hierarchy of ~~levels of~~ abstraction
- vehicle is too abstract/vague/general/etc a term to be useful in this situation
- we have to move our language to a more "concrete" arena

12,000

- i suppose it is possible to have an interesting/useful conversation about vehicles, but i can't quite imagine right now.
- we have to talk about the 1973 lime-green dodge dart with the caved-in passenger ~~side~~ door the word "think" is like "vehicle."

we all agreed that it can refer to a wide variety of situations/behaviors

- i assert that the word "think" is an incomplete idea
- when i say think i mean think. I say imagine negotiating the sale of a vehicle motor-v or not
